CRYPTO &amp; COFFEE

The market traded mixed as market participants remained glued to the first of the eagerly anticipated block reward halvings, with Bitcoin Cash first in line. However, the event itself proved somewhat anticlimactic in nature, at least upon the official timestamp of the event there was limited evidence of excess volatility and in fact, the spot price actually edged higher, albeit marginally so. Still, it will take some time to truly understand whether the widely expected flipping indeed materialised. Technically, Bitcoin Cash trades just below the key 200DMA line, while the shorter-dated 100DMA line is seen just above $300 level.

In terms of news flow, even as Ethereum is riding the positive wave ahead of Eth 2.0 release, it was announced that CasperLabs, the firm tasked with developing Ethereum's implementation of Proof-of-Stake (PoS), has decided to launch its own blockchain. According to a recent announcement, CasperLabs plans to launch its own PoS blockchain in collaboration with Singapore-based crypto exchange.

In other news, it was reported that California-based and crypto-friendly financial firm Social Finance — SoFi — is acquiring the digital payment platform Galileo. As per the announcement, SoFi has signed an agreement to pay $1.2 billion for Galileo Financial Technologies.
